Many thanks to everyone who gave up their Wednesday morning to help in the garden at St. Cyprian's, and some who even gave up blood as they worked!!!! Some of the things we did will look very obvious to people. At the moment they do not look the prettiest, but given a couple of weeks of growth they will make the church grounds look all the more attractive and welcoming.

You may notice some plastic things attached to trees and wonder what they are. They were part of the wild flower kits we have received from Kew Garden, and are nests for solitary bees and other helpful insects, help for wild flowers.

You will also notice that part of the grounds to the left of the Garden of Remembrance are scraped, and will notice through the summer that the area will not be mown. This area has been planted with many wildflower seeds, and will be allowed to develop as a wildflower meadow.

There are other things we hope to do further to our grounds, including installing an information board in the not too distant future. We continue to develop our grounds for a benefit of nature – if you have other ideas, suggestions and thoughts please share them.

Next Sunday – 19th April – we have our next service at 3.00pm. This has traditionally been a service for folk who find it difficult to get to the morning services for all sorts of reasons. However, everyone is welcome to join us.
